Chapter 1 by PuppyLover

I watched it all. I watched it all burn down. I saw it all, I saw it all crumble down. Why didn't I call 9-11? Why would I? If I started it, there was no reason to. Being a dragon, was a horrible thing. But when you start something, you have to end it.
"What happened here?" I heard people asking themselves in their brains.
But I couldn't tell them, I just couldn't after all it was my fault. I didn't mean to, but when these things happen you just need to let it go. But I can't let it go... my family was in there.

Chapter 2 by Phantim   ✏

Things are tough when you are adopted. Anyone can tell you that, a feeling of unwantedness, of not belonging, the idea that your parents abandoned and rejected you. It's some pretty heavy stuff to deal with, and let me tell you; It is a lot harder when you're actually a dragon. I'm not sure if both of my birth parents were dragons, or just one, or a half dragon... There is a million things I would ask them if I could ever meet them. Apparently magic is real too, they must have cast a spell on me to help me stay human looking when I was younger. It must have started to fade more quickly than they thought. When I was seven I started to get weird skin problems, than God for Jacob. He was a boy that I went to elementary school with, he was always smart magic, is what they taught me. I would be lost without them to guide me, and Jacob as my best friend who I can always talk to. They even made me some potions to keep my dragon side hidden. Still, it seems like now even those aren't working... I wipe a tear from my chick and leave the crime scene through the gathering crowd, I need to find Jacob.
